REPORT GENERATION CUT FROM WEEKS TO HOURS

Growth by acquisition means growth by fragmentation.

When you buy a company, you inherit more than its assets — you inherit its systems. Every entity arrives running its own accounting platform, its own logins, its own subscription, its own way of storing years of financial history. Pulling one consolidated report means logging into a half-dozen platforms and reconciling by hand — a process that can take weeks and is out of date the moment it's finished.

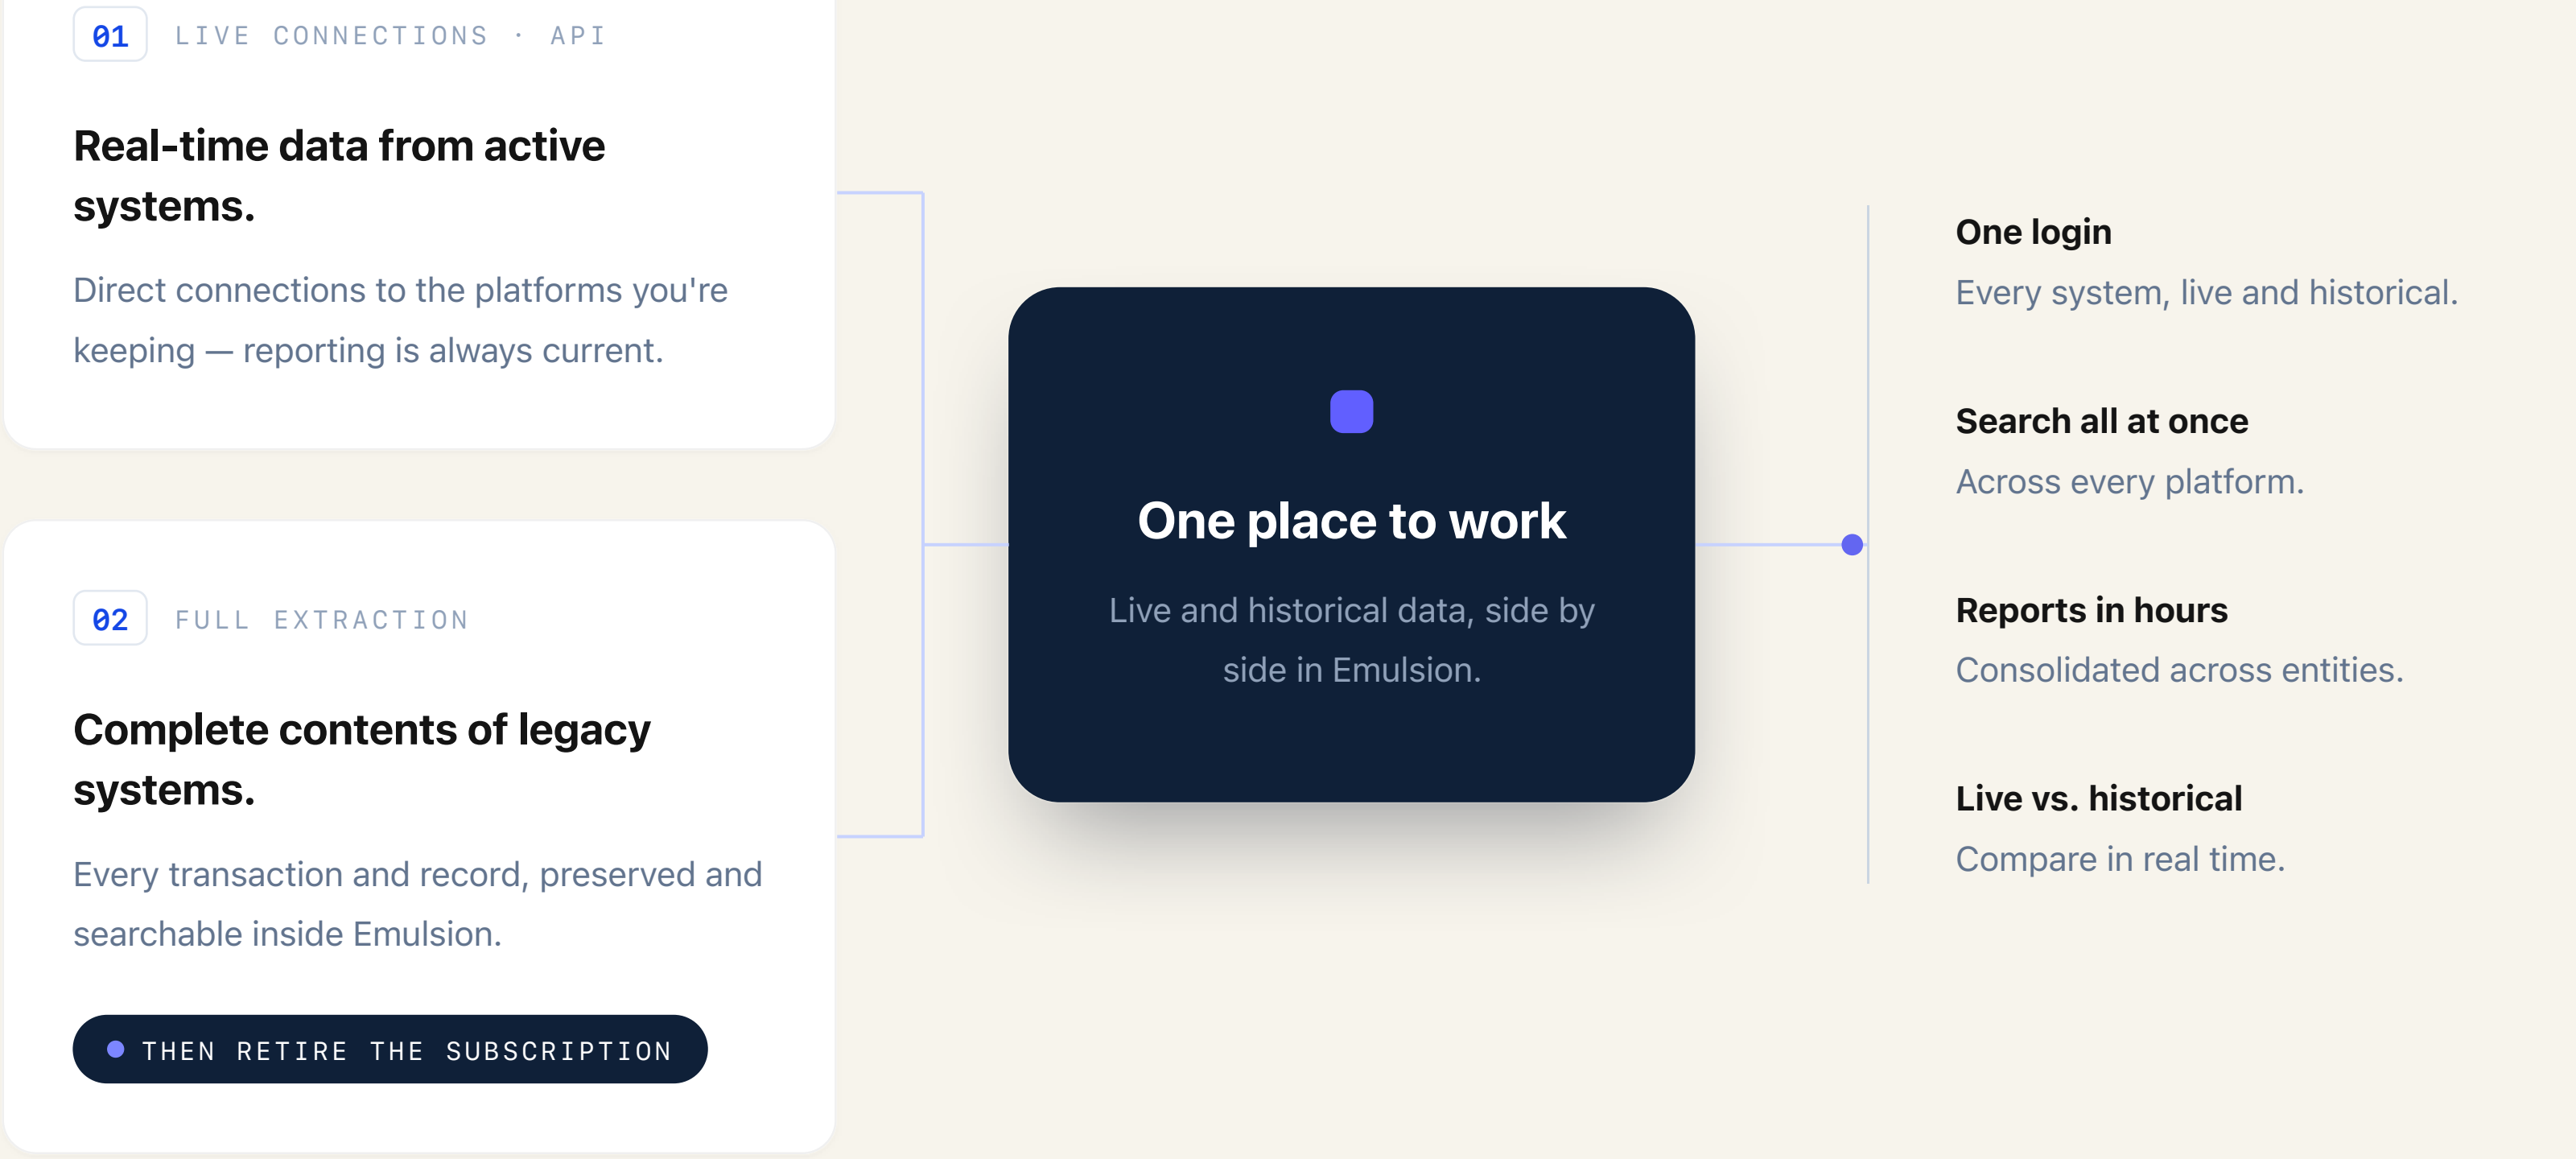

Emulsion consolidates every system you run into one.

Connect your platforms once and Emulsion becomes the single place to search, report, and retain your financial data no matter which system it originally lived in. Live data stays live. Historical data stays accessible forever. And you finally see it all together.

Two ways to connect, one place to work.

A hybrid architecture covers both the systems you're keeping and the ones you're retiring.

Everything, finally in one place.

Six things that stop being problems the day the migration finishes.

- Search across every system at once.
Find any record, from any platform, without knowing where it lives.
- Reports in hours, not weeks.
Consolidated reporting across entities, without manual reconciliation.
- Retire legacy systems but keep the data.
Cancel redundant subscriptions while preserving every historical record.
- Live and historical, side by side.
Compare current performance against history in real time.
- Secure by design.
Your financial data held in dedicated, secure databases.

04	Any multi-system organization	If your financial data is split across platforms, Emulsion brings it together.

CASE STUDY

Weeks → Hours

REPORT GENERATION TIME

A serial acquirer of utility companies across the Southwest U.S. bought companies faster than it could unify them — each ran its own accounting system, with separate subscriptions, separate logins, and no way to see finances as a whole.

Emulsion connected every system — extracting historical data from some into a secure database, connecting live to others by API — behind one login. Report generation dropped from weeks to a few hours, and the team now works from live, accurate data they can compare against their full history in real time.

WHY NOW

The pain is rising and the enabling technology has arrived — at the same moment.

Consolidation is accelerating More acquisitions across fragmented industries mean more financial fragmentation.	Software-cost scrutiny is up Organizations are actively hunting redundant subscriptions and legacy-system spend.	Finance moves in real time Weeks-long manual reconciliation no longer clears the bar.	The technology is ready Modern platforms expose APIs that make live unification feasible in a way it wasn't a decade ago.
